While the boat can easily handle its own within the cruising segment, it also offers an incredibly well-rounded experience on the water, which is why it earned Trailer Boats 2010 Excellence in Design award in the Cruiser category.

Starting in the spacious cockpit, where much of Rinker's efforts were focused, the company created a handful of unique features. From the reclining aft seat, which doesn't just fold flat but can be adjusted to multiple angles, to the slide-out bench seat that retracts from the port-side lounge to form U-shape seating around a removable cockpit table, the innovation in the cockpit is obvious.

Other highlights of the 33-footer include a day hatch for quick access to the engines without raising the entire hatch, a flat-screen TV in the cabin that faces the port-side lounge but is mounted on a spring-assisted cabinet door that opens for viewing from the V-berth, and an oversized, oval-shaped skylight, which isn't just cool looking, but serves a purpose letting plenty of natural light into the cabin. There's no doubt Rinker has a winner with its 310 Express.
